

Authentic Voice: Alicia

I hope to become a teacher myself. And what I've been exposed to at KIPP has made me realize that education is important in the development of children and just making future generations okay. As someone who was born and raised in the Hispanic culture I've embraced that. But as I grew up I was lost from that. When I came to KIPP I was reconnected with my culture because Hispanic heritage is just so powerful here. For me as an individual success is not allowing other people's standards and expectations of me to get in the way of what I want to do. Because, I can do anything I want to do. This school has shown me that through good education and through good relationships with others, you can do anything.
